Handout 7: Understanding Behaviour as a Means of Communication

If a person is unable to communicate their feelings, they may need to use behaviour as a way of expressing themselves. Strong emotions such as fear, anxiety, pain, anger and frustration are reflected in strong behaviours. Supporting people to develop communication that is more acceptable is an important role for service providers.